Every day, union laborers are doing more than building infrastructure—they're building opportunity, stability, and a better future for their families.

In an industry that continues to change, one thing remains constant: the power of standing together. Union membership is more than a job, it's access to training, protection, and benefits that make long-term security possible.

This issue highlights what that support looks like in real life, from members who are creating new paths forward to those whose decades of dedication have helped define our union's legacy. It also includes important benefit updates and resources designed to support you every step of the way.

Because a strong union doesn't just support work, it supports people, families, and futures.

Retiree Work Restrictions Eased for 2026

The Board of Trustees for the Laborers' District Council and Contractors' Pension Fund of Ohio recently amended the pension Plan. Effective May 1, 2026, the disqualifying employment rules will temporarily be altered to allow retirees to work more hours than previously allowed. In summary, retirees are permitted to work up to 400 hours in covered employment between May 1, 2026 and December 31, 2026 without it resulting in a suspension of pension benefits. If a retiree works more than 400 hours in covered employment between May 1, 2026 and December 31, 2026, his or her pension benefits will be suspended accordingly. Under this temporary provision, a retiree is not permitted to work in the month immediately succeeding the retiree's pension effective date. (For example, if your retirement effective date is June 1, 2026, you are not permitted to work in disqualifying employment under this provision until at least July 2026.)

- For any participants receiving disability pension benefits, this change does NOT affect your work restrictions. Any work in covered employment is still considered disqualifying employment and may result in your disability pension benefits being terminated.
- This amendment does NOT apply to any pensioner who was already working in disqualifying employment prior to

May 1, 2026 and continues to work in disqualifying employment after May 1, 2026 without interruption.

- This is only a temporary change to the Plan. Beginning again on January 1, 2027, the disqualifying employment rules which were previously in place will go back into effect. Disqualifying employment rules vary depending on your normal retirement age (age 60, 62, or 65 depending on your work history) and/or when you first started working under covered employment.
- Any retiree working under this temporary 400-hour rule will NOT be entitled to a re-computation of his or her monthly pension amount based on the additional service.
- If you are not currently retired and receiving pension benefits, or if you are not planning on retiring in 2026 from the LDC&C Pension Fund of Ohio, this change does not affect you.

Understanding the rules before you engage in employment after retirement is very important and can prevent many potential issues in the future. If you have any questions about this change or disqualifying employment in general, please don't hesitate to contact the Pension Department at 800-236-6437.

old. This was a transformative period for Middletown, marked by industrial growth and societal change. Joining the union at a young age, he quickly established himself as a diligent worker, noted for his tireless dedication and strong moral compass. # Beca Rawlins

LIUNA Local 423 Columbus
George J. Igel & Co., Inc.
9 Years in the Trade

Beca Rawlins is not only building a successful career in the trades—she’s doing it on her own terms, proudly embracing her femininity in an industry that often stereotypes women. She’s also helping to pave the way for other women in construction. Through her dedication, skill, and leadership, she demonstrates that the industry is a place where women can grow, succeed, and build lasting careers, while benefiting from the stability and support that union membership provides.

Her story highlights how union programs, benefits, training, and mentorship create opportunities in a changing workforce, proving that construction can be both a rewarding and secure path for anyone willing to take the first step.

Beca Rawlins has been working as a laborer for 9 years and takes great pride in the work she does every day. She joined the Laborers’ Union after a life-changing conversation while juggling two jobs—UPS during the day and bartending at night—trying to make ends meet as a single mom. One evening, still in her work boots and dirty clothes, she met a woman who introduced her to the union and the opportunities it could offer. That moment set her on a completely new path. Hands-on work and learning new skills are what Beca enjoys most. Whether it’s concrete, asphalt, pipe work, or dirt work, she takes pride in contributing to something tangible. She also values working outdoors, being part of a team, and continuously learning skills that have helped her grow into a versatile Laborer.

Her advice to newcomers is simple:

“You don’t need to know everything when you start. The apprenticeship and training programs are there to teach you the skills you need. If you’re willing to work hard and learn, the opportunities are there.”

For Beca, union benefits have played an essential role in supporting her family. She highlights the training opportunities, which allow her to build real, lasting skills. Access to healthcare coverage has reduced stress by ensuring her family has quality care, while pension and retirement plans give her confidence in a stable future. These benefits provide stability and peace of mind for her and her loved ones.

Family and community are central to Beca's life. She's a dedicated single mom to her 13-year-old son, actively supporting his activities and being present in his life. She's also in Central Ohio Women in the Trades, teaching classes that empower women and young adults, giving them confidence using tools and learning basic home repair skills.

Balancing a career and motherhood is challenging, but Beca sees it as an opportunity to set a strong example. She wants her son to understand the value of hard work, dedication, and continuous learning—lessons she now has the experience to pass on. Her son is incredibly proud of her and dreams of one day joining the union himself. Beyond work, Beca enjoys volunteering and staying actively involved in both the union and her company, always looking for ways to give back and support her community.

One of her proudest achievements is taking a chance on herself. Entering the industry with no experience, she has built not only a career but also confidence and a sense of purpose. She's equally proud to represent women in the trades, showing that construction is a path where they can succeed and thrive.

Beca proudly embraces her femininity in her personal life—she wears makeup and enjoys the little indulgences many women do—while proving every day in the field that women are fully capable of performing any task in construction. She defies the stereotype that women in the trades must act or look “masculine” or always be dirty. When she speaks at union events or gives presentations, she is often asked to be her naturally very feminine self, so that young people and newcomers can see that the trades are not limited by gender or appearance. Her coworker, Hanna, shares Beca's approach, feminine and confident, yet fully capable of doing any task in the field. Beca jokes that the only thing they can't do is reach the keys in the office container because they're too high, but for everything else, they can do everything a man can. She emphasizes that the environment is very collaborative, with men always willing to lend a hand.

When she's not on the job, Beca enjoys creative hobby-home improvement projects, decorating, crafts, or simply relaxing with a glass of wine.

Through dedication and perseverance, Beca continues to grow in her career and inspires others to explore opportunities in the trades. Her journey is a reminder that with the right attitude and support, a rewarding future in the industry is within reach.

Colorectal cancer starts in the colon or rectum. It usually begins when some cells grow in an unusual way, forming small lumps called tumors. Finding it early makes treatment easier and greatly improves the chances of getting better.

CHANGING INDUSTRY, DIVERSE WORKFORCE

Why Union Jobs Still Matter for Laborers

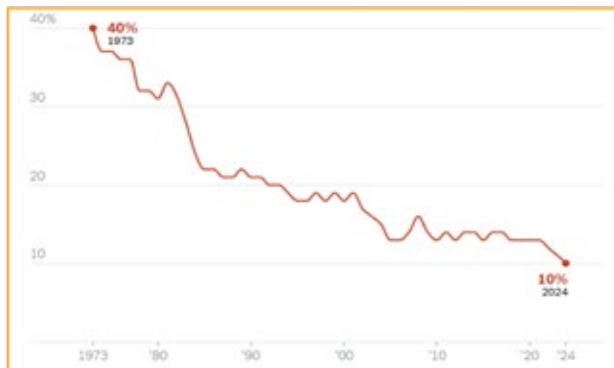

Construction has long been a cornerstone of the American middle class. For generations, union construction jobs provided strong wages, reliable health coverage, and secure retirement options—especially for workers without a college degree.

But over the past several decades, the industry has changed significantly.

A recent analysis by The New York Times highlights major demographic and economic shifts since the 1970s. Today, immigrant workers make up a much larger share of the construction workforce, while union membership has declined nationwide.

These changes have reshaped the industry—and the experience of the workers within it.

Union membership in U.S. construction has continuously fallen since the 1970s

Source: unionstats.com. Robert Gebeloff and Lily Boyce/The New York Times

A Changing Economic Reality

In the past, union construction jobs consistently paid more than the average American wage and included comprehensive benefits. Today, many nonunion construction workers earn less than the national average and often lack employer-provided health insurance or retirement plans. As a result, pay, benefits, and job security now vary widely across the industry. For many workers, that means greater uncertainty than previous generations faced. In this environment, access to structured benefits is no longer just a perk—it's a critical foundation for long-term stability.

For every dollar the average U.S. worker earned

The Value of Union Benefits

For union Laborers, benefits programs remain one of the strongest safeguards in a demanding and sometimes unpredictable field.

Union benefit funds help ensure access to:

- Health insurance for workers and their families
- Short-term disability support during injury or illness
- Mental health resources
- Retirement security through pensions and annuities

These benefits provide stability in an industry where injuries and career interruptions are common.

As one retired union worker noted in recent reporting, decades of union work made it possible to retire with financial security. That kind of outcome isn't accidental—it's exactly what union benefit programs are designed to deliver.

A More Diverse Workforce

Another major shift in construction is the growth of immigrant labor. In the 1970s and 1980s, the share of foreign-born workers in construction was similar to other industries. Today, it is nearly twice as high.

Construction remains physically demanding work. Without access to benefits like health insurance or retirement plans, many nonunion workers face serious financial risks if they are injured or unable to work.

Supporting All Members

As the workforce becomes more diverse, access to clear, understandable benefits information is more important than ever.

Ohio Laborers Benefits is committed to supporting members and their families by providing guidance, resources, and assistance in multiple languages—including Spanish—so every member can fully understand and use the benefits they've earned.

BUILDING CONTRACTOR RELATIONSHIPS

Q&A WITH BRIAN GASTON

COMMUNICATIONS MANAGER AND CONTRACTOR RELATIONS MANAGER AT OHIO LABORERS BENEFITS

After nearly three decades with Ohio Laborers Benefits, Brian has seen firsthand how strong collaboration between contractors and the union directly impacts members' lives. He shares insights from his dual role in communications and contractor relations, the importance of accurate contributions, and how building trusted relationships helps ensure members receive the benefits they've earned. He also reflects on memorable partnerships, evolving industry collaboration and why working together remains key to a stronger future for all.

What is one of your hobbies or something fun about you outside of work?

A fun note about my past – I grew up in Local 639's jurisdiction, went to college in Local 83's, work in 423's, and live in Local 574's. In my spare time I love to listen to music, including Ohio bands like Caamp and the Black Keys. I'm also a self-proclaimed TV addict that watches entirely too many shows on too many streaming platforms (RIP Stranger Things). And finally, I love to gamble on sports and play poker.

How long have you been at Ohio Laborers Benefits?

I started with Ohio Laborers Benefits in 1999 and have held multiple roles throughout the last 27 years. I serve two roles currently, Communications Manager and Contractor Relations Manager.

A little about your role as Contractor Relations Manager and what you enjoy most about it

My main objective as the Contractor Relations Manager is to ensure employer contributions for pension, insurance, and annuity are received timely and accurately so Ohio Laborers receive all the benefits they have earned.

Can you share a story about a contractor relationship you developed that had a big impact on members or projects? What made it successful?

Back in 2019, a representative from the John R. Jurgensen Company out of Cincinnati contacted me to visit their office during their construction season kickoff event and speak to their many Laborers about the benefits we offer. This was the first time I met Dave Coniglio. Fast forward a few years and a couple more visits to Jurgensen, Dave's path and mine are crossing on a more regular basis. Mr. Coniglio is now the Director of Labor Relations and Safety Affairs for the Ohio Contractors Association (OCA). He also currently serves on both the Pension and LECET Boards of Trustees. Dave has come into these Board meetings and has been a breath of fresh air and brought new energy and camaraderie to the Board. I look forward to working more with Dave and helping to make a positive impact for Ohio Laborers.

How do you help contractors ensure contributions, data, and payments are accurate and timely?

This is a departmental team effort. Besides me, we have six other full-time employees dedicated to making sure the hours are received and processed accurately and timely. This includes three full-time auditors that work with contractors to review payroll data and verify all hours were credited properly. Occasionally these audits result in large audit billings, but more often than not, audits result in minor adjustments. Other departmental roles include data entry of all the monthly contribution reports, keeping track of all the agreements, and reaching out to contractors who are late reporting.

How do contractors respond when you explain union programs like health, pension, and annuity?

Most responses have been rather positive. Unfortunately, we don't get many inquiries. We only have a handful of contractor visits each year that are focused on benefits. We are always willing to visit contractors and talk to Laborers and company representatives about the benefits we offer.

After nearly 30 years at Ohio Labor Benefits, are there projects or situations that stand out as examples of collaboration and "stronger together" moments? How did they impact members' lives?

In 2022, a newly signed employer, Brown

County Rural Water, requested I come and talk to their newly organized staff of approximately 25 individuals about the benefits we offer. The event went well with a short presentation and then questions and answers. But by going there and meeting the Laborers and the office staff, it gave a personal touch that made them more comfortable to reach out with any questions they had about benefits or reporting. Specifically, Heather, who ran their office, would look out for the Laborers when something was going on in their life and find out how our benefits could adapt to the situation.

What are some common challenges contractors face, and how do you help solve them in a way that strengthens members' benefits and protections?

Ohio Laborers Benefits' top priority is providing benefits to Laborers, bottom line. Unfortunately, this sometimes leads to less pleasant interactions with contractors that may be struggling for one reason or another. We understand that contractors face all kinds of challenges from cash flow to getting work to keeping fully staffed, but we are always going to prioritize protecting our members. For contractors that find themselves in a bad spot, just keep in contact with our office. We're not here to be the bad guy, we're here to work with you to take care of your employees.

How do you see contractor-union collaboration evolving? What opportunities exist to make these relationships even stronger for members?

I've attended nearly every board meeting for all the Funds over the last 20 years, and fortunately the union and contractor representatives have generally had a positive, friendly relationship. With the new leadership in place on both sides, I have high hopes the collaboration will only get stronger. I think LECET, which we highlighted in the last newsletter, is a great example of the ongoing collaboration.

What's one piece of advice for contractors about working with the union, and one for union members about understanding the contractor perspective?

It's simple, we are all in this together, so work for each other. Each group's success relies deeply on the other.
